Mark Devlin, a leading geologist and environmentalist, takes us on a tour of the Anthropocene, from the coal mines of West Virginia to the oil fields of the Middle East, from the melting glaciers of Greenland to the polluted rivers of China.

Along the way, he introduces us to the scientists, activists, and policymakers who are working to understand and address the challenges of the Anthropocene.

This is a book for anyone who wants to understand the profound changes that are happening to our planet and our place in it.

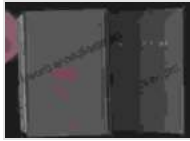

"A brilliant and unsettling account of our planet's future."—Bill McKibben, author of The End of Nature

"A must-read for anyone who wants to understand the challenges of the Anthropocene."—Elizabeth Kolbert, author of The Sixth Extinction

"A powerful and persuasive argument for a new way of thinking about our relationship with the planet."—Naomi Klein, author of This Changes Everything
