The Science of Tornadoes

Tornadoes are one of the most powerful and destructive forces of nature. They are formed when warm, moist air rises from the ground and meets cold, dry air from the atmosphere. This creates a spinning column of air that can reach speeds of up to 300 miles per hour.

Tornadoes can cause catastrophic damage to property and infrastructure. They can also be deadly to humans. In the United States, an average of 70 people are killed by tornadoes each year.

The Risks of Storm Chasing

Storm chasing is a dangerous activity. Chasers often put themselves in harm's way to get close to tornadoes. This can lead to injury or death.

The risks of storm chasing include:

- Being struck by lightning
- Being hit by debris
- Being caught in a tornado
- Drowning
- Hypothermia

The Choices That Survivors Must Make

When a storm chaser is caught in the path of a tornado, they must make a series of life-or-death choices.

These choices include:

- Whether to stay in their vehicle or take shelter in a building
- Whether to drive towards the tornado or away from it
- Whether to abandon their vehicle and seek shelter on foot

The choices that survivors make can have a profound impact on their chances of survival.
